

ABSTRACT

Messages in a high reliability industrial control system are associated with safety messages that enable reliable detection of data errors caused during transmission of the message over the network. In particular, error detection codes are generated and transmitted along with message data. At a receiving node, an expected EDC is generated and compared to the EDC transmitted over the network to determine whether any data was corrupted.

QBMKE5294810.1